2017 Marks Frank Lloyd Wright's 150th Birthday

Renowned architect's influence resonates throughout Domino's Farms

The legacy of America's greatest architect endures to this day in the over 600 buildings and special designs Frank Lloyd Wright created, and his influence on architecture and design continues to resonate worldwide, including here at Domino's Farms.

Frank Lloyd Wright

Some notable examples of Wright's designs are on display throughout the Domino's Farms Office Park, which is actually a Wright-inspired Prairie-style building. Among the collection are original drawings, blueprints, and models of some of Wright's most celebrated designs including the world-famous Fallingwater home which is cantilevered over a mountain stream in southwest Pennsylvania. Also on display are exquisite glass windows from several Wright-built homes which he called "light screens." Michigan is well represented with models of two Detroit-area houses and Wright's original colorful design drawings for a house in Ann Arbor.

Highlights of the items displayed onsite include stained glass windows and doors from Wright's leading Prairie School designs of the late 19th and early 20th centuries; original drawings from his 70-year career; and lithographs from the 1910 Berlin Wasmuth publication, which depict the rich detail of many of Wright's pioneering early modern projects. An original model of Wright's experimental reinforced concrete San Francisco-Oakland Bay "Butterfly Bridge," envisioned by Wright in 1949 and modeled in 1951, was featured in the film Die Hard.

This "smart" traffic signal will be synchronized with the signals on Plymouth Road and will include wireless technology to make real-time signal adjustments in response to traffic conditions. During construction (which will be completed in August), access will remain open, though periodic lane closures will occur.
